Insights from the Lives of Olive Doke and Paul Kasonga for Pioneer Mission and Church Planting Today By Conrad Mbewe

Insights from the Lives of Olive Doke and Paul Kasonga for Pioneer Mission and Church Planting Today deals with the question of the hand over process of pioneer missionaries to the first indigenous leaders in church planting missions situations. It recognises the fact this process when wrongly handled has caused a lot of harm to the work of missions. The case study in this thesis, which took place at the start of Baptist work in Zambia, shows one example in which it was done exceptionally well. The researcher also uses biblical interpretation and qualitative empirical analysis to augment his research. He finally posits that the mutual respect and mutual admiration between Olive Doke and Paul Kasonga is what led to this admirable result.

Editorial Review

Review

As one who has had the task of reading through many post graduate theses I can say that very rarely does one find genuinely scholarly work combined with deep spiritual insight and sheer reading enjoyment! . . . This work has value far beyond Africa, indeed, for the whole world and to everyone who has caught the vision of spreading the good news to the ends of the earth and establishing communities of Christ's followers in every nation and people. Dr Kevin Roy Church Historian and Pastor Muldersdrift Union Church, South Africa

About the Author

CONRAD MBEWE holds a PhD, MPhil and an MA in Pastoral Theology from the University of Pretoria as well as a BSc in Mining Engineering from the University of Zambia. Having previously trained and worked as a mining engineer in the Zambian copper mines he answered God's call and became pastor of Kabwata Baptist Church in 1987. Since then he has continued to work in Lusaka as well as establishing twenty new churches in Zambia and surrounding countries. Dr Mbewe is a keen writer: he currently maintains a column in a weekly national Zambian newspaper, acts as editor for the magazine Reformation Zambia and has published several books. He is married to Felistas and they have five children.
